A Letter Expressing Support for Candidate Technical Sergeant (TSGT) Alexander Frogley

November 10, 2026

Gentlemen of The Rittenhouse Club,

I am honored to write in support of TSGT Alexander Frogley's candidacy for membership in The Rittenhouse Club.

Alex is charismatic, creative, and always making things happen. What struck me when we first met was his genuine drive to solve interesting problems. Last year, when asked what he wanted to pursue at Wharton, he responded, "I want to figure out a way to secure critical minerals for the global supply chain." He follows what interests him and figures out how to turn it into a business opportunity. Most important he's a good friend and someone I trust.

Following high school, Alex enlisted in the Air Force and completed the rigorous selection process to become a Pararescueman (PJ) and combat medic. He deployed twice to Afghanistan, first alongside Army Special Forces teams and later during the evacuation of Kabul, where he moved throughout the city to locate and evacuate individuals facing Taliban retaliation. He went on to serve in the elite 24th Special Tactics Squadron, supporting the Army and Navy's premier Special Mission Units (SMUs) on some of our nation's most sensitive missions in Syria and elsewhere.

Between deployments and busy training cycles Alex found time to work as an arborist, starting his own business climbing and cutting down trees in North Carolina neighborhoods. He's always moving, hustling, and finding ways to apply what he knows. Alex is an entrepreneur at heart.

He bring that same drive to Wharton. After interning at Blackstone and initially pursuing banking, Alex decided his real interests were in defense technology and venture capital. He's particularly interested in solving the challenge of securing critical minerals and metals to strengthen the U.S. industrial base, while also pursuing his broader passion for defense technology. Ultimately, he wants to build his own company or fund.

Alex is a through and through "good dude." He takes a genuine interest in people, builds deep relationships, and finds ways to bring everyone along. He is exactly the kind of person that will both thrive in and bring great value to The Rittenhouse Club.

Alex's candidacy is seconded by S01 Alex Bilay and Master Sergeant Dan Swensen.
